PROSPERITY IS NOW IN FULL STRIDE

A FEDERAL SURVEY SHOWS BIG BUSINESS BOOMING

After Uncertainty of the Early Part of This Year— Freight Traffic Records Broken Last Month—New Gains Registered in Industrial Output—Expansion Unequalled in Nation's History Near.

Prosperity has regained its full stride in American industry and business after a few faltering steps early this year, official government reports showed Sunday.

Distribution of goods thruout the country, as reflected in increasing railroad freight traffic, broke all records for previous years in February, the federal reserve board has announced after business and financial survey.

New gains in industrial production have been recorded, pushing output slightly about last year's mark.

Steel mills, supplying the basic material for innumerable industries, are running almost up to the peak at this time last year.

Altho certain industries have failed to equal the unprecedented production of 1926, substantial gains have been reported since the first of the year.

Declining wholesale prices reached their lowest level last month since the summer of 1924, according to the reserve board's figures.

Supporting the government's conclusions, the National Industrial conference board announced a "firm and preceptibly rising tendency during January" in wage levels and plant activity.

"Evidence of the soundness of underlying conditions is seen in the unprecedented stability of wage and employment trends during the past two years, in the very gradual increase in the purchasing value of the dollar as measured by living costs and in the increasing industrial activity during a period which, on the whole, has been one of declining commodity prices," the board said.

"Real weaker earnings—that is, the purchasing power of the factory worker's weekly pay at the beginning of 1927—were 30 per cent greater than in July, 1914."

The federal reserve board summary said in part:

"Production of manufacturers increased in February for the second consecutive month, and the output of minerals, after declining in January, advanced once more in February to

the record level reached last December.

Factory production and employment however, continued smaller than during the corresponding month of last year. Production of iron and steel has increased steadily since December and reports indicate that operations of steel mills in March were at almost the same high rate as in March 1926.

"Automobile production increased from 234,000 cars in January to 298,000 cars in February and weekly figures of employment in Detroit factories indicate some further additions to production in March, but output has continued much smaller than a year ago.

"Daily average consumption of cotton by mills in February was larger than in any previous month on record but activity of woolen and silk mills decreased as compared with January."

MARRIED BY PROXY

Miss J. Neaff of Amsterdam, Holland, was married to Jan Koning of Lloydminster, Alberta, Canada, before she set sail for Canada from home. They were 7,000 miles apart, but as the proxy marriage is allowed in Holland, a brother of Koning became the "groom" for the ceremony. Photograph taken as Mrs. Koning stepped off the train for a moment at Winnipeg, enroute to Alberta.

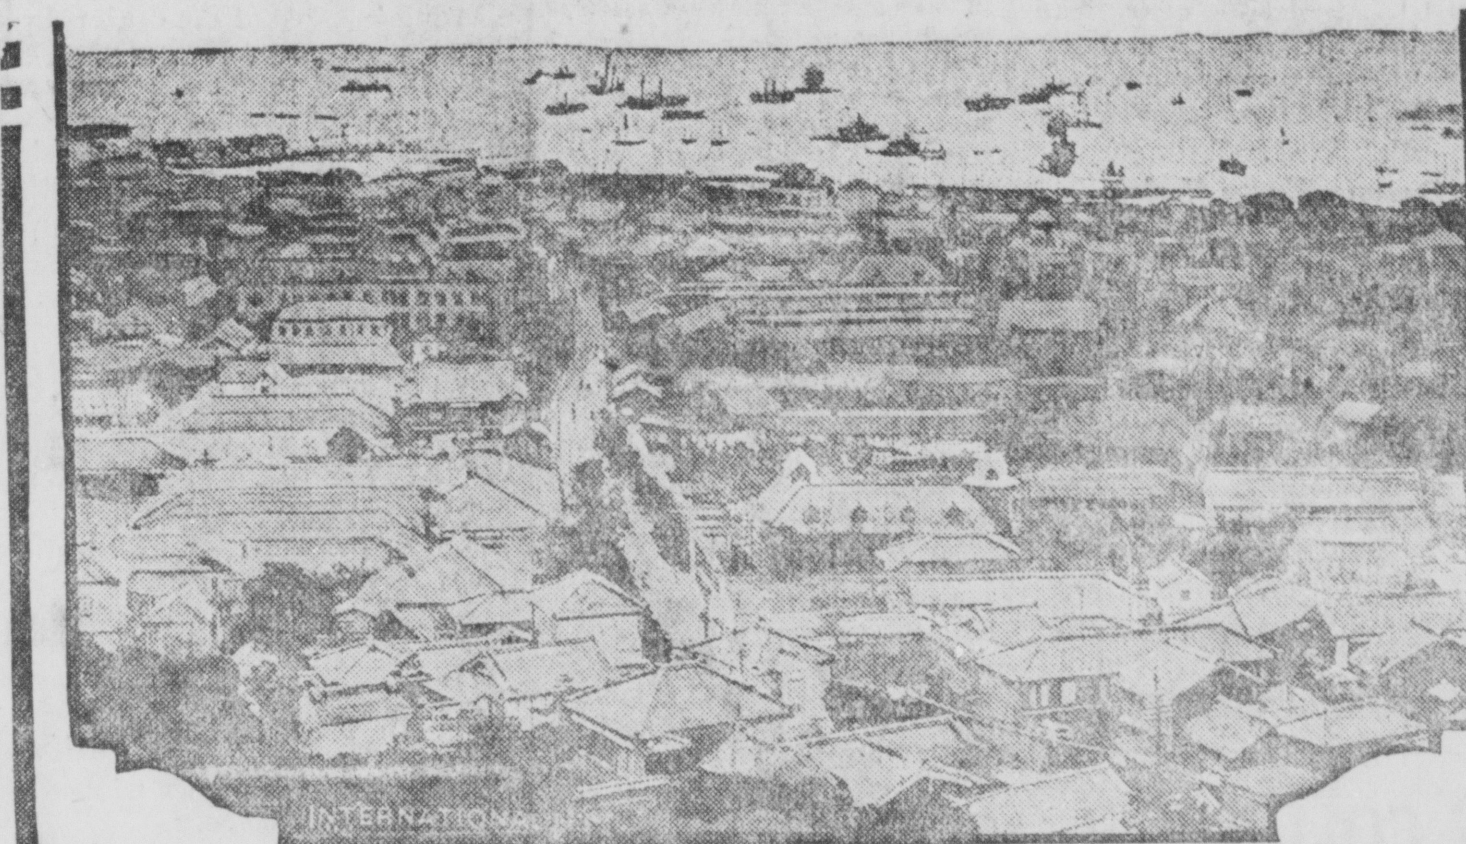

The Fires Before Troy

So many in number, between the ships and the streams of Xanthus, shone forth in front of Troy the fires kindled by the Trojans. There were kindled a thousand fires in the plain; and by each one there sat fifty men in the light of the blazing fire. And the horses, munching white barley and rye, and standing by the chariots, waited for the bright-throned morning.—Iliad VIII, 560.

INVESTIGATING FINDING BODY

Youngstown—With evidence pointing to a murder, Sheriff Peter Corll is today investigating the circumstances surrounding the finding Sunday of the charred remains of a man's body in the ruins of a granary on the McGrew farm. Sheriff Corll and Deputy Cox, after they had been notified by telephone of the fire, discovered an oil can which had been recently emptied near the scene of the fire. A belt buckle of unusual design and several gold teeth give authorities hopes of identifying the body.

PRISONERS ESCAPE FROM PENITENTIARY

Guards Fired, They Fail to Hear Convicts Pry Their Way Out of Prison.

Three prisoners in an escape from Ohio penitentiary early Sunday made as much noise as a boiler factory to pry open two gates in the wall, but not enough to attract the attention of two guards set to watch the exits.

As a result the trio, serving long terms, and all tuberculosis patients, were at large Sunday night and the guards, whose names Warden P. E. Thomas declined to disclose, faced the loss of their jobs Monday.

The convicts are: Everett Shoemaker, 25, Gallipolis, received at the prison January 18, 1926, to serve 15 to 20 years for shooting with attempt to kill.

Monte Delauter, 35, Findlay, received March 17, 1926, to serve 15 to 30 years for burglary.

James Scott, 23, Newark, received March 9, 1925, to serve eight to 20 years for shooting with attempt to kill.

Some time between 3 and 4 a. m., Sunday, the men, who were patients in the tuberculosis ward of the prison hospital, kicked a hole thru the fly screen separating them from the prison yards.

The process must have caused considerable racket, Warden Thomas thinks. But the guards didn't hear it. And when a hospital guard found the three missing, they said they had not seen them.

The warden said if the guards were not asleep, at least they had been negligent.

What route the men took after their escape was not learned. Police and guards searched the neighborhood within an hour, but trace of the men had been lost.

The deceased was born in Amanda and was a daughter of William and Belle Magley Williamson. She married Peter Hellenthal June 15, 1922, in this city. Her husband and one daughter and two sons survive. They are Mrs. M. E. Hastings, Blenn Hellenthal, at home and William Hellenthal, of Portsmouth. Of her immediate family her mother and one sister, Miss Jane Williamson, survive.

The funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the Springbank church, Rev. Mr. Clifford, of Andersonville, will officiate. Interment in Springbank cemetery.

TURNEY RELEASED IN SLAYING OF FITCH

Cincinnati, March 25.—Harry Turney, owner of a garage in which or near which, it is believed Harold H. Fitch, alleged bootlegger, was killed, was released from the Hamilton County jail today when detectives were convinced he was telling the truth.

Turney, ordered to be held in jail after he admitted that his garage in Reading had been used by bootleggers as an "exchange depot," denied that he knew Fitch or heard any shots early Saturday morning.

Officers continue to hold to the theory that Fitch was killed in or near the garage and his body carried to a roadside near Reading, where it was found Saturday. Fitch, they believe was killed by other bootleggers.

Uses Velvet, Lame for Dinner Frock

Motion Picture Actress Selects an Interesting Combination.

From the informal frock that starts the day to the dinner or dance costume that is worn when the occasion demands, the vogue for introducing contrasting fabrics is seen.

The sports outfit which combines jumper and skirt of different fabrics is well known to those who follow Paris fashions in dress. In the afternoon costume which finds velvet so satisfactory in part, if not in all its frocks, there appears a very youthful dress that shows a chiffon velvet skirt in either plain, shirred or tucked lines combining smartly with a blouse of graceful outlines in soft silk or satin. In tones the skirt and blouse harmonize, but do not match.

In the evening the effect is the same, but the manner of producing it more formal. The skirt is generally of velvet, although frequently chiffon is used for a contrast. The jumper is usually of lame and is, of course, sleeveless in its formal aspect. It may have features of a real jumper or it may appear in a bodice effect in the contrasting fabric.

Whereas the sports costume generally introduces a blouse that has but little in common with the skirt; in the formal mode there is usually some definite style that is reproduced in both bodice and skirt. For instance, a scarf that matches the skirt in fabric, a flower that appears at both skirt and blouse, an applique that is featured on both pieces or some form of trimming that connects them.

Mary Astor, motion picture player, appearing in "The Sea Tiger," whose youthful appeal is so well suited to the jumper type of costume, has selected a charming version of this mode for a new dinner dress. The frock also possesses another feature of interest in its combination of black and white, the lame bodice being contrasted with the skirt of black velvet. The hem of the skirt is a feature of interest and the bodice possesses a quaint appeal in its sleeveless and snug-fitting qualities. A point of decoration that is featured in both blouse and skirt is the morning glory spray that is seen at the waist as well as at one scallop of the hem of the skirt.

Beauty Out of Fashion, Fashion Authority Says

Beauty is passing out of fashion. Smartness is taking its place. Fashionable women now prefer to be smart rather than to appear beautiful or pretty. The ascendancy of smartness is bringing the plain woman into her own.

Baron de Meyer, noted fashion authority, in an article to be published in Harper's Bazar, says:

"To be pretty may be considered a valuable asset in the world, but it is hardly sufficient now in competition with smartness. Women who have mastered the art of dressing rarely hesitate between what is becoming and what is chic. They invariably choose the latter.

"A strange and eccentric looking woman, by adopting and accentuating modern plainness, by wearing clothes too plain, too simple, too neat, is apt to become one of the world's most admired women.

Plaits Are Graceful

For all their apparent simplicity many of the smartest frocks are marvels of intricate details. Tucks running in every direction form tricky designs, plaits give the desired fullness without adding one iota to the figure, while flounces poised one over the other emphasize the femininity of the wearer.

Metallic Hosiery

Evening stockings with real gold thread combined with the silk are among the new footnotes. These metallic stockings are most sheer and flattering when worn with the gold or silver gown.

DODGE BROS.

Inc., Announce Election of Board of Directors.

Dodge Bros. Inc., Detroit, Mich., announces the election to the board of directors of two dealers, C. Russell Dashiell, of Chicago and Samuel S. Thornton, of Philadelphia. They succeed C. M. Bishop of Brooklyn and F. S. Albertson, of Los Angeles, both Dodge Brothers dealers.

The election of Mr. Dashiell and Mr. Thornton is in accordance with Dodge Brothers' policy, announced a year ago, of giving its dealers direct representation in the management of the company. The plan calls for the rotating in office of the dealer-directors from year to year so that every section of the country will be represented.

Both Thornton and Dashiell are "original Dodge Brothers dealers," having been identified with the sale of Dodge Brothers cars since 1914 when the car first came on the market. Mr. Thornton is identified with the Thornton-Fuller Co., of Philadelphia. His 1914 contract called for the delivery of 400 cars. Last year the contract specified 7,800 cars for delivery.

Mr. Dashiell is president of the Dashiell Motor Co., of Chicago. His total sales the first year were 900 cars while in 1926 the Dashiell Motor Co. delivered 9,600 cars.

The first evidence of wisdom is a confession of ignorance.

The Caveman and the Highbrow

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

SAID Mr. Rascover to Mrs. Rascover: "The trouble with Martha is that she scares off eligible young men—she's too blamed highbrow for 'em."

Mrs. Rascover gave a deep sigh. "That's it, I suppose," she agreed. "She's twenty-five now—a year older than I was when we were married. I've talked to her and talked to her, but it's no use. She's a walking encyclopedia of all the 'ologies' and talks of Literature and Art with capital letters."

"I suppose that just suits the Manchester fellow," said Mr. Rascover. "I can't bear him. He gets my goat. I wish she would marry Bart Jencks. He's all right, personally, and his father has money. But fellows like Bart will stand about so much highbrow stuff and then they shy off, no matter how pretty a girl is."

Now all this regarding the relations between Bart and Martha was strictly true. But one thing—Bart wasn't afraid of her, and most young men were. Martha had tolerated the young man at first because she found him amusing; then she went on tolerating him with the idea of improving and building up his mental equipment.

That last is a dangerous phase. When a woman undertakes reformatory or uplift work with regard to a young man you can almost always hear the wedding bells tinkling in the distance. In spite of all her highbrow frills, Martha was a pretty bright girl.

Martha had not seen Bart for a week—he had got into the habit of calling at least twice a week and this habit puzzled her. She did hope he would call that night. Not because she was so anxious to see him, of course, but because she had an unpleasant duty to perform and wanted to get it over with. She was not going to do anything crude, you understand; not going to tell him that he must cease calling, or anything like that; but just deftly impress upon him that, as the romanticists used to say, "she could never be his," though as a matter of fact, he had never asked her.

Egbert Manchester had called on her the night before. Egbert was on the same psychic plane as she. He wore glasses, taught in a girl's college and was up on everything worth while. It was a liberal education in the higher branches to hear him talk. When he had first begun calling Martha was sure she had at last met her soul-mate. But, to tell the truth, Egbert had become rather a bore. Besides, he had an unpleasant way of correcting Martha—as if he were correcting examination papers. And it must be acknowledged that, while Martha's knowledge was all-embracing, it rather lacked accuracy. Subconsciously she was glad that it was Bart Jencks that she was expecting and not the erudite Egbert.

It did not take Martha long to get under way when Bart arrived. She was going to show him by a logical discourse how impossible it was for two persons so different in mentality, temperament and psychic plane to take upon themselves the relations of man and wife. But hardly had she got well started when Bart interrupted her with: "Martha, are you a good cook?" Under the unexpectedness of the attack she faltered and replied: "Why, yes, mother thinks I am. She insisted on my learning domestic science. Why?"

"Well," drawled Bart, "being able to cook, of course, isn't everything; but a woman who knows how to cook herself can supervise the kitchen department better than one who can't. You have every other qualification for a good wife. I'm glad you have a knowledge of cooking, too. It will come in handy after we are married."

"Married?" gasped Martha. "Who are we?"

"Why, you and I, of course," replied Bart. "I saw your father about it, and he's agreeable."

"This is madness," cried Martha. "I have no idea of marrying you."

"Better get the idea, then," returned Bart calmly, "for I'm going to marry you—and you have known it for a long time. Guess we can tip our psychic planes so that they will meet if we try. Then you know you would have years and years of married life to devote to my mental uplift." That last shot hit the bull's-eye. There flashed through Martha's brain two pictures. In one she was married to Bart and leading him gently to higher things. In the other she was married to Egbert Manchester, who was oppressing her with his intellectual superiority and correcting her at every slip she made.

"You are going to marry me," went on Bart confidently—"and if I catch that sump, Egbert Manchester, hanging around here much more I'll punch his nose."

"I was never so astonished in my life!" protested Martha.

"Glad of it," replied Bart, "come, give us a kiss." Martha struggled as he took her in his arms—but what could a poor weak woman do in the hands of a caveman?

Invisible Light

Those mysterious rays of invisible light which constantly play about us, yet which we never see, hold seemingly endless possibilities for usefulness. For example, says Popular Science Monthly, the latest use for ultra-violet rays is in the testing of silkworms. Healthy worms have the strange property of giving off visible light when exposed to invisible ultra-violet rays, whereas unhealthy worms give off weak light or no light at all. Similarly, some dentists now use ultra-violet rays to determine whether teeth are alive or dead.

"The young know too much, and at that it's the wrong kind of knowledge. Even little children nowadays—"

"A school-teacher chalked the Roman numerals XXX on the blackboard.

"What does that mean, children?" she asked.

"The class of children giggled in a shocked way, and a little girl piped: "Kisses."

Making Love to Mademoiselle

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

CLARKE BUFFINGTON was doing about forty an hour on the stretch of road which runs from Quebec to Montreal.

"Heck!" he grumbled, guiding the car deftly between a bus and a hayrick. "This is a healthy way of enjoying the scenery—all be one's lonesome in a place where everyone speaks French, and not the sort of French you learned in college either. What I would like—"

On an unexpected curve, the roadster swerved to the soft shoulder, slewed, balanced, then turned over into a bit of meadow three feet lower than the built-up road.

When Clarke woke to a real cognizance of his surroundings, he was lying on a very high, very comfortable bed. On the walls were strange pictures and about the room was unfamiliar furniture. An old woman in a black dress that reached to the floor stood measuring something out of a bottle into a spoon.

Feebly he recalled what had occurred and stirred slightly.

At once the old woman came over and laid a wrinkled hand on his forehead. "Pauvre garcon!" she murmured. "Pauvre garcon!"

But the following morning when Monsieur le docteur, who could speak broken English, arrived, Clarke was able to get a light on his present situation. He learned that his spill had given him, along with lesser injuries, a fractured thigh. That it had been thought the long ambulance ride to the hospital at Three Rivers would be too much for him.

The doctor praised Madame Vadnais as a nurse "superbe."

Afterwards, Clarke lay thinking over his plight. Four hundred miles from home in what was, to all intents and purposes a foreign country. What should he do? Weakness made him homesick and his eyes filled with tears.

At that moment, the door opened gently. Hastily blinking back the tears, Clarke turned his head, expecting to see Madame Vadnais, the nurse "superbe," who was, his instinct told him, the tall old lady in black. But it was not Madame Vadnais.

The person who had come in was young and slender and beautiful. "Bon jour, mademoiselle!" said Clarke, wishing he could rise and bow.

She answered him in French and she had to repeat what she said not once but several times before he understood it. He sighed to think that between himself and this enchanting girl, whom he took to be one of Madame Vadnais' several granddaughters, communication must be as tedious and limited as one-way traffic.

In the days that followed, he grew fond of the whole Vadnais family, from the grandmother, who nursed him, down to the several small children. There were two other young girls besides the blue-eyed Marie, but it was Marie whom he came very nearly to worship.

Each day she visited him, and each day he sought to understand her better. Sometimes old Madame Vadnais joined them and all three got considerable fun out of his attempts at the language.

The weeks passed quickly. It was with mingled feelings that he took his first walk from the small green-shuttered house out to a bench in the sun. It was pleasant to smell the fragrance of cut hay, to look across the narrow strips of fenced fields stretching down to the river, to catch the gold gleam of a church dome towering above the village on the other side, knowing that many miles beyond lay the home to which he would be at last able to return.

But when he thought of Marie a strange ache troubled him. He knew that he had come to love her. He knew, also, that American men had married French girls and found happiness.

When he saw her coming toward him with a little smile on her face as if she cherished a secret joy, he flung any apprehension he might have felt to the wind.

"Marie," he began, rising somewhat unsteadily to meet her, "vous etes la—la—plus— Oh, hang it, if I could only tell her I love her in good plain English!"

From beneath curling lashes Marie looked up at him oddly. "Why don't you try?" she asked in plain English. Clarke was too dazed to speak. Then, "What—why—" he stammered. "Marie—"

"Actually, I am Mary Leonard," said the girl. "A native of beautiful old Stockbridge. I roomed with Berthe Vadnais at the convent in Montreal and was visiting her when you had your accident. You took me for one of the family, and it seemed best to leave it that way and have the rest do so. The Vadnais would have felt continually shut out, if they knew we had so much in common.

"Besides," she said, laughing, "you know the strictness of French chaperonage. They would never have felt quite sure of the discreetness of our conversation. And now, if you have forgiven me, just what"—and here she blushed adorably, "were you about to say?"

Renewed strength flowed into Clarke's veins, as he drew her to him. "Je t'aime!" he said tenderly. "My darling!"

SPRING FLY SHOULD GET BIG WALLOP

World With Fewer Flies is Possible If All Get Busy Early.

Now is the time to strike, knock, hit, tap, rap, slap, flap, dab, pat, thump, bang, slam, punch, thwack, whack, dowse, baste, pelt, be-labor, wallop, and swat that first fly of spring before it becomes the five-billionth fly of autumn. The idea, that is, is to kill the fly.

A flyless world may be impossible, but a world with fewer flies than now buzz around to annoy mankind is quite possible, scientists believe. The mathematics and genetics of the fly problem can be presented this way:

One pesky fly which winters over from the fall and despoits its eggs in the middle of April will, theoretically, have 5,598,720,000 descendants by the middle of September. Even tho a couple of billion of those descendants fail to survive, three billion flies could be quite annoying.

Scientists, more serious-minded, urge the human race to unite in swatting that first fly of spring in order to lessen the spread of disease. Flies carry the germs of typhoid and dysentery among others. Flies are particularly well adapted to spreading disease germs because of their hairy ubiquitous legs.

Go gunning, therefore, for the first fly you see this spring.

She Paid the Fees

The married life of a Sydney, Australia, couple threatened to be a stormy one from the outset. As the couple was entering the church a dispute arose as to who would pay the pastor for marrying them. The man, says the Sydney Bulletin, had been giving his betrothed a part of his wages for a considerable time and contended that she should pay the pastor from this fund. She had other views on the subject, but when the man refused to go through with the ceremony unless she paid the parson's fees the young woman complied.

A colored defendant before Judge Paul V. Wetter in a recent minor trial was obviously avoiding the whole truth about the case and the court decided to take a hand in the questioning. "Honest, judge," answered Mose. "I wasn't no place. That's the truth."—Indianapolis News.

Urged to Advertise

Stockholm.—Quoting President Coolidge's conclusion that American trade and industry has advertising to thank for its powerful position, Capt. Grafstrom told the Stockholm Merchants' club in a recent address that newspaper advertising is the heart of all modern publicity campaigns. Basing his remarks on his observations during a recent study tour in the United States, he declared that the merchant who is enough of an optimist about his goods to plunge into advertising but at the same time enough of a pessimist to keep his feet on the ground in his calculations, has the future in his favor.

Nevertheless, Adair can recall most vividly many stirring episodes of his early life, several of which resulted in a price on his head. Characters which enter into his musings include the James brothers, Henry Starr and his band of Oklahoma outlaws and Cherokee Bill.

Touring the World

LIEUT. COL. E. ALEXANDER POWELL, noted war correspondent, travelog writer and globe trotter, is engaged in a tour of the world via America's most modern and popular means of travel—the automobile.

With this American car, and accompanied by his wife and daughter, Col. Powell spent the winter visiting the islands in the eastern Mediterranean. Material gathered there will be included in his book, "Mediterranean Moorings," which he is writing on route. He will proceed through Finland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and others of those newer countries. The party will drive to Constantinople and thence by ferry across the Bosphorus. The tour will then take them down through Turkey and Syria to Damascus or Jerusalem. Arabia, Persia and India will be visited as the tour proceeds. Col. Powell will drive entirely across China and sail from there for California, completing a trip entirely around the world and traveling by automobile while on land.

The Buick brougham used by the Powells on the trip is standard in every respect except for items of special equipment. It was chosen because of the world-wide Buick authorized service which is available wherever automobiles are used.

Col. Powell is one of the best equipped men in America to undertake this long tour. He holds the record of being the only man to drive from Paris to India, crossing the Sahara Desert. He is also the first man to drive a car from Mexico to Alaska, accomplishing this feat in 1913.

AMUSEMENTS

"Obey the Law" a Columbia picture starring Bert Lytell, which opens at the Met theater today has been hailed by screen critics as a new type of crook film. It is a picture without bloodshed and red melodrama but what it lacks in physical violence is made up in mental shrewdness, depth of plot and suspense.

Lytell, as the super-crook, already has won renown as the most gifted screen analyst of super-crook roles who ever shrugged his way thru a trying celluloid ordeal. He has the support of such notable players as Eugene Gilbert, Edna Murphy, Larry Kent, William Welsh, Hedda Hopper and Sarah Padden.

The story was based on the special sketch by Max Marcin and it serves the dual purpose of contending silently, yet effectively, that it pays to be honest; and also, it provides an intense hour of interesting amusement.

Lytell appears as a superior sort of prince in the kingdom of the underworld; the sort who, in other days would have rivaled Robin Hood. And while the character is a likable sort, he has to pay the final penalty. There is no false hero worship and no sentimentality. There is a well connected plot and the story moves to a definite conclusion with no slowing up of the action anywhere.

Shaded Fringe Is Favored in Paris

Diagonal Line Also Much in Limelight and Makes a Charming Gown.

Once upon a time it was a heart-breaking thing to belong to the fringes of society. This season no society is complete without a great number of fringes. All Paris is using them and America is beginning to follow suit. Vionnet, Chanel and Molyneux are among the creators who are retiring to the cloistered recesses where they dream great things, and return with fringes developed in a way lesser geniuses never thought of.

Who but Chanel would have evolved shaded fringes? And how strikingly beautiful they are! Two-toned and all ombre effects are so well thought of this season that printed fringes naturally follow the mode. A stunning dinner gown of valencia blue flat crepe has the skirt of shaded blue fringe, with a cleverly arranged scarf, edged with fringe.

Scarfs, by the way, to achieve smartness today must be related to the costume. A scarf which is merely there because it is there is passe. One model has a berth collar of fringe across the front, with a scarf effect of fringe at the back.

Vionnet's masterpiece is a gown of Grecian type, straight and slim and very simple in effect. This is the aim of all smart houses—to give a slim, simple silhouette and still be exceedingly elaborate in detail. Again we find shaded fringes, this time in rose, used for tier after tier, narrower at the top and some 12 inches deep at the hem. Nothing else but fringes compose these tiers. You can easily vision the shimmering, slinky movements of the wearer.

The diagonal line is very good this season. And this is where fringes are at their best. Two tiers drawn diagonally across the skirt, with a third forming the bodice from one bare shoulder to the hip, is a recipe for a very up-to-the-minute and daringly charming gown. If black is the color chosen, the bracelets may be of emeralds, which are the reigning stone of the season. And if enough bracelets are used, no other color relief need be had, although one such model has a slender line of green used as a girdle.

Very, very fine plaitings are being used a great deal this season. These are frequently so closely done that one must look twice to be sure they are not fringes. Tiers either of plaitings or fringes are greatly favored, perhaps with a determined effort to get away from the kick plaits of so many seasons.

It is somewhat of a shock to find fringes used even for sports costumes. A trim little model with a bloused upper portion is done in rose marie crepe, with a fringed skirt. Another, of the new nileen, has 10 inches of fringe over each hip. Certainly no hint of stiffness or lack of freedom here.

One decidedly clever move, if we are to have fringes for sports, is the fashion of turning the edges under. This not only stops fraying, which the best of fringes will indulge in, but it gives a weight which is invaluable in holding them in place.

Tricotine Crepe-Paper Flowers—Boutonnieres

Like all accessories of present mode, the boutonniere which milady wears on the lapel of her coat or the shoulder bouquet on her frock, is expected to either match the costume or to artfully contrast it, so as to add "the touch that tells." Making one's own corsage bouquets is the latest fad among women who are deft at handcraft. These tricotine crepe-paper flowers, as they are called, are as handsome as the expensive tinsel and metal flowers one buys. Wherever metal and fancy dress fabrics are sold, there one also finds French silver or gold tricotine, which is really a transparent tinsel tissue. The idea in brief, is to stretch this cobweb-like glittering tricotine over each double-folded strip of crepe-paper, before working it into petals and leaves.

Sequin Wraps

Flashing with a myriad of lights is a new evening wrap made entirely of silver sequins. The lining is of pink velvet and there are collar and deep cuffs of white fox.

SHORTS AND MIDLINGS

One of every three Ohio farmers is still on a mud road, state university economists report after analysis of highway reports.

Says Sam:—Occasionally you hear a man say the corn borer menace is exaggerated. It was his cousin, I guess, who said the same thing in Canada five years ago.

Farming is enough of a gamble as it is. Testing seed corn for germination removes some of the chance for a good crop.

The buzz of the first fly is also a hint of spring—and a hint to spring at it with a nice bug fly swatter in hand.

Few shrubs will stand spring pruning. Among the few, according to the state college of agriculture, are hydrangea, Rose of Sharon, beauty berry and the late blooming spirea.

Five million farm boys and girls were members of 4-H clubs during 1914-24, the federal department of agriculture says.

"Revolutions have never lightened the burden of tyranny. They have only shifted it to another shoulder."—G. B. Shaw.

HIGH SCHOOL PLANS EXTENSIVE PROGRAM.

Tuesday night, April 5, at 8 o'clock residents of Circleville and the surrounding community are to be favored with an elaborate and highly entertaining program at the Circleville high school auditorium.

The program presented largely by members of the High School Dramatics class will be augmented by the presence of an exceptionally juvenile orchestra whose members are enrolled in the second grade of the local public schools. These diminutive musicians will hold forth for approximately a quarter of an hour.

The High School Glee club, the biggest and best ever organized at Ye Institution of Knowledge, will open the program with several appropriate selections and will be succeeded by the youthful dispensers of harmony.

Several solos by Charles Walters will be followed by the delightful comedy "The Neighbors" acted by members of the dramatic class.

Thereafter the Glee club will be heard in several numbers and Miss Mabel Young will present a reading entitled "The Bride." This will be followed by solos by Miss Eleanor Snyder and a mock trial of a half hour's duration will conclude the evening's entertainment.

Popular prices of thirty-five cents for adults, twenty-five cents for high school students and ten cents for grade school pupils will be in order.

The Modernist Bible

A lot of people in the land talk about wanting the good old Bible of their fathers. Most of them never read it. For 14 books of the Bible—the Apocrypha—have been out of the Bible for 100 years, despite the fact that the curse is on anyone who takes away “one jot or one tittle” from the Bible.—Emporia Gazette.

Life and Business

There is no glory so bright but the veil of business can hide it effectually. With most men life is postponed to some trivial business, and so therefore is heaven. Men think foolishly they may abuse and misspend life as they please and when they get to heaven turn over a new leaf.—Thoreau.

WM. INGERHAM
IS HELD FOR SAM
TILSON'S DEATH

Argument Over Use of Roadway
Is Cause of Trouble—Sixth Vinton Slaying.

Chillicothe, March 25.—“I’ve shot a man and want to give myself up.”
That was the statement of William Ingerham, 62, resident of Clark Hollow, Eagle township, in Vinton county, as he stepped into Sheriff Immell’s office and asked for the sheriff, Thursday afternoon.

Ingerham carried a shotgun under his arm as he entered the sheriff’s office. “I just shot Sam Tilton, my neighbor, just across the Ross-Vinton line near Tucson. I shot him with this gun after a dispute over a private roadway across my farm. I don’t know whether I killed him or not—I left for Chillicothe just as soon as he fell to the ground.”

Tilton, who was 50 years of age, died almost immediately after the shooting.

The Tilton killing is the sixth in which W. J. Jones, youthful Vinton county prosecuting attorney, will be called upon to prosecute murder charges since his election last November. He sought the office immediately after graduating from law school because he wanted to “case” into practice of law in a sparsely populated district.

RICH COW'S MILK

Best For Bottle-Fed Lambs Says
Sheep Expert.

Lambs that must be bottle-fed do best on frequent small feeds of rich fresh cow’s milk. It is a mistake, says D. S. Bell, in charge of the sheep work at the Ohio Experiment Station, to skim or water cow’s milk intended for orphaned lambs.

Substituting a ewe that has lost her lamb as a foster mother for the orphan lamb is best. When a foster mother is not available bottle feeding is the next best resort.

The impression that whole milk from cows should be diluted for lamb feeding seems to be quite general. Sometimes milk is skimmed before being offered to lambs, and some sheep raisers even go so far as to dilute skimmed milk fearing that it would otherwise be “too strong for the lamb.”

The reverse is true. Ewe’s milk contains about 8.6 per cent less water, 3 per cent more casein and albumin, 5 per cent more fat and 0.3 per cent more ash than whole milk from cows, according to analyses. There is little difference in sugar content.

On this basis, an effort should be made to obtain cow’s milk that is rich in fat. It is also well to use milk from a cow that has recently freshened.

High mortality among bottle-fed lambs is often caused by too much dilution of the milk and from feeding too much milk at one time. It is best to imitate nature by using rich milk, giving a little at a time and often. Sanitary measures should be observed, as filthy bottles or nipples usually lead to digestive disorders.

Nation is Observing Death of Beethoven

Composer Who Died Century Ago Lives in Some of World's Greatest Music.

A childhood of misery—a middle life of poverty—a path beset by tragedy, disappointments, hates—declining years haunted with depression and deafness — of such stuff did Ludwig Van Beethoven weave the marvelous fabric of sound with which America and the world are this month observing his death.

He sprang from lowly and insignificant people, this master of masters. His mother was a cook, his father a drunken musician.
Privation and toil were his,
but never discouragement.
In middle years, in an age when republicanism was treason, he dared be republican even while he commanded the respect of courtiers and princes. Passionate in his loves and hates, ruthless toward opposition or criticism, always in love but never married, he lived and worked in the manner of genius.

Born in 1770

Beethoven was born in Germany, December 16, 1770.
But his music has been confined by no national boundaries. He died on the evening of March 26, 1827, as a fearful storm was sweeping over Vienna. There was a sudden fall of hail and snow, and then a fierce bolt of lightning with a roll of thunder. The composer roused from his stupor, shook his fist at the frowning skies, and died. It is the hundredth anniversary of this tragic date that provides the occasion for one of the greatest musical observances the world has ever known.

Ludwig Van Beethoven

Musicians, great orchestras, music clubs, talking machine organizations and other groups closely related to the music of the immortals have for months been preparing for the observance. The magnificent passages of the composer's works, great and less great (for none of them are small) are being heard from the great concert hall to the lowly mountain cabin.

Greatest Works Recorded

Many of those who know Beethoven have heard his work
principally through the medium of recorded music. There is that most famous and most popular of his nine symphonies, the No. 5, in C Minor, which Sir Landon Ronald and the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra have recorded in its entirety. The Flonzaley Quartet have contributed the matchless Quartet No. 16, in
F Major, and the equally celebrated Quartet No. 2, in G
Major. And there are the Eg-
mont Overture, the romantic
Moonlight Sonata, the Sonata
No. 9 which is better known,
perhaps, as the Kreutzer Sonata, and other symphonies
and instrumental compositions which have been recorded by some of the world's most famous musicians and
musical organizations.

The extraordinary improvement in recording and reproduction that has taken place in the last two years has been one of the greatest factors in the recording of complete musical works. Also, some of the finest results obtained under the new recording process have been with compositions of the immortal Beethoven.

TAXICABS

Favorite Prey of Big City Hold-up Men.

Taxi drivers are a particularly rich prey for holdup men because very few robberies of this sort are ever reported, writes a New York taxi driver in an anonymous article in this week's Liberty. Speaking of being held up by two well dressed young men whom he had picked as fares, he says:

"Did I stop at the nearest police station and report those bad little boys to the coppers? I did not. That would have meant a further loss. If the police were lucky enough to capture them, I'd have to go to court to testify at all the hearings and trials. By the time they were convicted I'd have lost more time and money than I'd been robbed of. And ten chances to one some slick lawyer would have wiggled them out of it. And maybe, while they were free on bail, they'd have laid for me with automatics and made me look like a honeycomb radiator.

"It's just one of those things you have to put up with if you drive a hack around New York after midnight," the writer explains. "I'll bet that not 10 per cent of such stickups are reported to the authorities. If you run a grocery store, you must expect that a certain number of your customers will run out on their bills; if you drive a taxi, you must expect a certain number of holdups."

EDUCATIONAL NOTES

Children of Porto Rico are taught to speak, read and write in both the Spanish and English languages. More efficiency in English than in Spanish, in both speed and thought getting, was shown in a recent test of reading abilities of pupils in Vieques. The supervisor states that more intensive work is done in English than in Spanish, and that consequently the children are more careful in their use of English.

X-ray photographs of Harvard freshmen, taken this year for the first time, showed that only 36 of the 842 men had any physical defects at all, and these were of a minor nature. As to posture, silhouetteographs showed that only 35 men carried themselves well enough to be rated in the "A" groups, 300 were graded "B," 375 "C," and 124 "D." These findings are slightly better than the statistics of the class of 1926.

Training for teachers of nature study work is offered by the Brooklyn Botanic Garden. Courses of one, two, or more years are given, open only to graduates of city training schools, normal schools, or colleges, and to teachers presenting satisfactory credentials of service. Work is correlated to meet the needs of each grade of the elementary school, and emphasis is placed upon outdoor garden practice. The courses have been accepted by the board of education of the city of New York for teachers' credits.

Lost Money Restored

Twenty-six years ago a purse containing $63 was lost by Alfred Canto, of Malone, N. Y. Recently an envelope from Pittsfield, Mass., was delivered to Canto containing that amount and a note, which read: "This is the money you lost 26 years ago." A card was inclosed with the request that it be returned to the sender so that he might know that Canto received the cash.

Vegetables for Royalty

All the vegetables eaten by the imperial family of Japan, says the Pathfinder Magazine, are grown in special gardens by experts who are careful to see that none but perfect products reach the royal tables. When the prince regent is on a tour the vegetables are sent to him every day in refrigerator cars. The gardens cover several acres and contain a number of large hothouses.

MACHINES, HAIRPINS, NOW CON MEN WARES

Mechanical Devices Used in Stock Schemes.

Madison, Wis.—The promotion of mechanical devices, from hairpins to washing machines and from bottle caps to airplanes, has taken more toll from the investing public than fake oil and mining ventures, is the opinion of Miss Olga M. Steig, examiner, securities division, Wisconsin railroad commission.

"The lure of large profits is no longer confined to those stocks which are expected to yield magnificent returns when the oil wells start shooting or the gold is brought out of the mines," Miss Steig continued.

Motor Profits Used as Lure.

"It is only natural that during the last decade the profits of Ford, General Motors and other successful automobile manufacturers should have stimulated the organization of new automobile enterprises financed by public stock sales, few of which have attained any degree of financial success and many of which have unfortunately turned out to be mere stock-selling fiascos. The Middle West will not soon forget Pan Motors, which probably stands out as the most flagrant of promotion schemes of the last ten or fifteen years. And the financial losses and actual financial distress occasioned by the many automobile accessory ventures and the truck and tractor promotions which have sprung up in the last few years as a natural outgrowth of the increasing popularity and utility of the motor, will remain a poignant memory for years to come.

"It is surprising to be asked every now and then why the commission allows the sale of stock in a venture which it must know cannot succeed. Obviously it does not permit the sale of securities in a venture which it knows cannot operate successfully. It would hardly be so foolish as to allow the sale of stock of a company promoting a perpetual-motion device or a group of opium chain stores. The first is clearly impracticable and would serve no useful purpose. The second would be in violation of the law of the land and could not long survive.

"But between what one knows cannot succeed and what one believes cannot succeed there is a vast difference. If an applicant presents a plan of business that is not unlawful, unjust, unfair or inequitable, if the commissions it proposes to pay for the sale of the securities are not excessive and if, in short, the securities are not inherently such as would work a fraud on the purchaser, the commission cannot refuse a permit, notwithstanding its own conviction that the enterprise will not operate successfully.

Law Aimed at False Representation. "The investor should remember that it was not the intent of the legislature, in enacting the securities law, to prevent speculation, or to stop the flow of capital into new enterprises merely because many of them eventually fail. The whole purpose of blue sky legislation is admirably summed up in the decision of a New York court rendered in October, 1924:

"The statute is aimed at fraudulent devices and false representations. It was not designed to prevent speculation or investment."

"If one shares the confidence and optimism of the investor in a device, he should not be prevented from purchasing a share in it. The legislature sought only to protect against misleading and fraudulent devices and statements.

"If the facts are clear and the purchaser of stock is not misled, he is free to do as he pleases. The law seeks to guard the investor from fraud, not from his own decisions deliberately and freely made."

"Only when an intelligent public learns the art of wise selection of investments will the need for blue sky legislation cease to exist."

Use Slow Movies to

Analyze Explosions

Washington.—Motion pictures are being used by bureau of mines experts to determine what happens in explosions, how flame propagates, and how their effects may be controlled.

With special apparatus developed at their Pittsburgh laboratory they have been able to make pictures with such great rapidity that they hope to be able to measure even the speed of the flame of combustion as it moves through a detonated dynamite cartridge.

By placing their cameras at apertures in an explosion chamber they can photograph a blast as it occurs and then study it at leisure from every angle by projecting the films as slowly as they please. In like manner they can learn a great deal about mine explosions by showing what happens when a spark flies into a dust-filled coal gallery.

Erring Husband Out

on $1 Week Allowance

Atlantic City, N. J.—The way to handle an erring husband is to leave him so little money he will have to stay home, it was declared here by Judge William H. Smathers in Domestic Relations court, when he ordered Frank Carlin, thirty, an expressman, to turn over $27 of his $28 weekly wage to his wife, Mrs. Emma Carlin. The wife complained that her husband drank, remained away from home and did not give her enough to keep the family going.

BORER DRIVE IS OUTLINED BY SECRETARY

Jardine Says Complete Ridance Cannot be But May be Controlled.

Not eradication, but control of the European corn borer is what the federal government hopes to achieve in this 1927 clean-up campaign.

Ohio agricultural college extension officials interpret that as the aim of the campaign on the basis of statements of state and federal entomologists, and of Secretary Jardine.

Said Mr. Jardine, when appearing before a congressional appropriations committee: "The infested area increased about 50 per cent last year. That is one of the reasons for this drive right now.

"I wish you would get this clearly in mind: This is not going to be an eradication program. We are going to have this moth with us indefinitely, in my judgment. This is a demonstration to farmers. The federal government and the states now are putting on a demonstration of how successfully we can control the borer's spread to a point where it becomes less destructive.

"We may" the secretary said, "keep this pest from moving forward into Illinois, Iowa, and all those states, for a while. We may retard it for 10 years."

Entomologists regard eradication of the corn borer as impossible. They do believe, however, that thorough clean-up of borer-infested corn crop remnants may reduce borer population enough to check its spread materially, and also check the amount of damage it can do in the heavily infested areas.

NEWS ABOUT COURT HOUSE

General Happenings Taken From the Records of the Various County Offices.

Morrison Goes to Pen.

Melvin T. R. Morrison, the darkey who killed George Turner on the morning of February 17, and who was indicted on a second degree murder charge and whose case would have come up Tuesday, March 29, appeared before Judge Curtin Saturday evening at 8 o'clock and withdrew his plea of not guilty and plead guilty to the charge of manslaughter. The court sentenced the prisoner to twenty years in the penitentiary. Before sentencing him Judge Curtin asked what became of the knife with which he stabbed Turner and the prisoner said the small pearl handled knife found on him was not the instrument he used. He said the knife used was a spring blade affair and after he reached home his wife secured the knife and threw it into the river. M. C. Seyfert Jr., represented the prisoner and Judge E. A. Brown, the State.

Wild Oats

There has been considerable dispute as to when is the best season to sow wild oats. To our mind it is not so much a question of when as how. And perhaps it isn't so much a question of how as of where. When all is said and done, no doubt, it remains a question of why. There's always an answer to the why, but it generally comes too late to be more than an explanation.

More Than One Way

Mrs. C. R. N. writes: "Our neighbor's little boy was visiting us and he spotted a candy box on the table, but I was busy at the time and overlooked offering him some. Finally, glancing at the coveted sweets, he remarked: 'My mother don't let me ask for anything, so you will have to offer me anything you want me to have.' He got the candy."—Boston Transcript.

A Lame Jumper for Mother

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

REGINALD FOSTER'S devotion to his mother was like a big brother toward a rather frivolous younger sister. For Reginald at thirty felt and often looked older than his mother at forty-eight. His own father had died when he was young and his mother was now wife of the well-to-do Peter Posner. Every Monday morning when Reginald reached his office there was a letter lying on his desk from his mother—that is unless he had changed to spend the week-end with her at the Posner country house thirty miles out.

This morning there was little news save that dear Peter had put through some very important contracts recently. "I meant to come to town last week, but everyone seemed to be having parties here and I couldn't get off. So I wonder if you'll do some shopping for me. You know how busy Peter is—don't you, Reginald darling? I really must have a lame jumper. I haven't an idea how much money they cost, but get a good one." Then followed a list including everything from a sundial for the garden to a good dog for one of the children. "And don't forget," said Reginald's mother in closing, "to have the lame jumper sent out at once. Monday and Tuesday I shall be motoring to the shore and back, but I do want the things Tuesday when I get back." Reginald was annoyed—as he always was on a busy Monday to have a shopping list to attend to for his mother—but he felt annoyance not so much with his mother as with Peter, her husband. "Pretty sleek," quoth Reginald aloud. "He's too busy to bother."

Reginald heard two or three notes of a pleasant little laugh which was quickly suppressed when he looked up. Daphne, his partner's twenty-year-old daughter, had come into the office ostensibly to get her father to forward her next month's allowance and had come in unannounced to Reginald's office.

"Who's pretty sleek?" she asked. "Peter's sleek," said Reginald abruptly. "Peter Posner, who married my mother."

"Oh, I think Mr. Posner is the dearest old thing—he's your stepfather, I suppose."

"I don't consider him any sort of a father to me," answered Reginald, "and he isn't at all old. He is some years younger than my mother, if that interests you—so he is not much past forty. I happen to be thirty myself."

"You poor old dear," said Daphne.

Reginald looked intently at Daphne without a smile. "You are very charming, Daphne," he told her. "There's no one I like so well at a dance—but in an office you're a nuisance."

"All right, I'll run away," said the girl, moving toward the door. "Only why did you say Peter Posner was pretty sleek?"

"Because he lets me do his wife's shopping. I've got to take time this noon to go out and buy a dog and a radio and a lame jumper, whatever that is."

"Ask me to have lunch with you," suggested Daphne, "and I'll help you."

"You wouldn't help, you'd hinder," Reginald told her. "You're a witch and you know it. No man could keep his head with you around."

Several times that morning Reginald looked at the list written in his mother's bold, clear writing. There was no doubt about the lame jumper. Peter took time to telephone to a large department store and asked if they had any lame jumpers in stock, but no one there knew what he meant.

"Maybe it's a new book," some one suggested, and some one else suggested that it might be something to eat. "It sounds like some sort of crippled acrobat," Reginald insisted. Of course it was impossible to try to reach his mother by telephone. She was away on a motor trip.

It was at two o'clock, after Reginald had visited every sort of store he could think of—even the florist's shop—that he telephoned to Daphne. "You haven't an idea what my mother meant by a lame jumper, have you?"

Daphne giggled. "I have an idea," she said. "Only you don't say it right."

"Will you help me buy one?" begged Reginald.

"Gladly, if you'll take me to tea."

At five that afternoon Reginald and Daphne, having finished their shopping, sat together in Daphne's favorite restaurant.

"I knew right away what she wanted," said Daphne. "Of course your mother should have put an accent over the 'e,' but you ought to have known. It's 'lahmay.' Lame jumpers are quite the fashion. I'm thinking of getting one myself, though they are a trifle old."

"So'm I," grumbled Reginald. "You told me so this morning. Daphne, why, when you think I'm such an impossible old fogey, do you torment me so?"

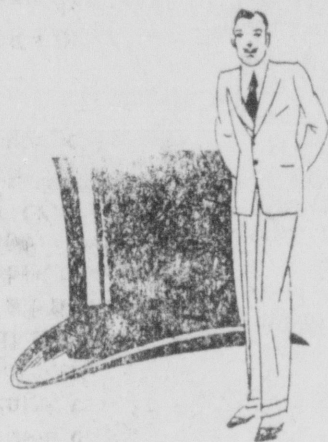

"Because," said Daphne looking intently at the cinnamon toast before her, "because I want you to propose. I had three proposals last week—and it does seem foolish to keep on saying 'no' to everyone—but then," Daphne interrupted herself, "if you don't care about me—"

"You don't mean you'd have me?"

"Of course I would, you old simpleton," assured Daphne. "And Reginald dear—after we're married I'm going to call Peter Posner 'papa.' May I?"

A FEDERAL SURVEY SHOWS BIG BUSINESS BOOMING

After Uncertainty of the Early Part of This Year— Freight Traffic Records Broken Last Month—New Gains Registered in Industrial Output—Expansion Unequalled in Nation's History Near.

Prosperity has regained its full stride in American industry and business after a few faltering steps early this year, official government reports showed Sunday.

Distribution of goods thruout the country, as reflected in increasing railroad freight traffic, broke all records for previous years in February, the federal reserve board has announced after business and financial survey.

New gains in industrial production have been recorded, pushing output slightly about last year's mark.

Steel mills, supplying the basic material for innumerable industries, are running almost up to the peak at this time last year.

Altho certain industries have failed to equal the unprecedented production of 1926, substantial gains have been reported since the first of the year.

Declining wholesale prices reached their lowest level last month since the summer of 1924, according to the reserve board's figures.

Supporting the government's conclusions, the National Industrial conference board announced a "firm and preceptibly rising tendency during January" in wage levels and plant activity.

"Evidence of the soundness of underlying conditions is seen in the unprecedented stability of wage and employment trends during the past two years, in the very gradual increase in the purchasing value of the dollar as measured by living costs and in the increasing industrial activity during a period which, on the whole, has been one of declining commodity prices," the board said.

"Real weaker earnings—that is, the purchasing power of the factory worker's weekly pay at the beginning of 1927—were 30 per cent greater than in July, 1914."

The federal reserve board summary said in part:

"Production of manufacturers increased in February for the second consecutive month, and the output of minerals, after declining in January, advanced once more in February to

the record level reached last December.

Factory production and employment however, continued smaller than during the corresponding month of last year. Production of iron and steel has increased steadily since December and reports indicate that operations of steel mills in March were at almost the same high rate as in March 1926.

"Automobile production increased from 234,000 cars in January to 298,000 cars in February and weekly figures of employment in Detroit factories indicate some further additions to production in March, but output has continued much smaller than a year ago.

"Daily average consumption of cotton by mills in February was larger than in any previous month on record but activity of woolen and silk mills decreased as compared with January."

So many in number, between the ships and the streams of Xanthus, shone forth in front of Troy the fires kindled by the Trojans. INVESTIGATING FINDING BODY

Youngstown—With evidence pointing to a murder, Sheriff Peter Corll is today investigating the circumstances surrounding the finding Sunday of the charred remains of a man's body in the ruins of a granary on the McGrew farm. PRISONERS ESCAPE FROM PENITENTIARY

Hear Convicts Pry Their Way Out of Prison.

Three prisoners in an escape from Ohio penitentiary early Sunday made as much noise as a boiler factory to pry open two gates in the wall, but not enough to attract the attention of two guards set to watch the exits.

As a result the trio, serving long terms, and all tuberculosis patients, were at large Sunday night and the guards, whose names Warden P. E. Thomas declined to disclose, faced the loss of their jobs Monday.

The convicts are: Everett Shoemaker, 25, Gallipolis, received at the prison January 18, 1926, to serve 15 to 20 years for shooting with attempt to kill.

Monte Delauter, 35, Findlay, received March 17, 1926, to serve 15 to 30 years for burglary.

James Scott, 23, Newark, received March 9, 1925, to serve eight to 20 years for shooting with attempt to kill.

Some time between 3 and 4 a. m., Sunday, the men, who were patients in the tuberculosis ward of the prison hospital, kicked a hole thru the fly screen separating them from the prison yards.

The process must have caused considerable racket, Warden Thomas thinks. But the guards didn't hear it. And when a hospital guard found the three missing, they said they had not seen them.

The warden said if the guards were not asleep, at least they had been negligent.

What route the men took after their escape was not learned. Police and guards searched the neighborhood within an hour, but trace of the men had been lost.

TUBERCULOSIS CAUSES DEATH FARMER'S WIFE

Mrs. Ella Hellenthal Passed Away Sunday at Her Home in Pickaway Township.

Mrs. Ella Hellenthal died Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock at her home in Pickaway township, on the Shirley Dresbach farm, aged 49 years. Her death was due to tuberculosis, following an illness of seven months.

The deceased was born in Amanda and was a daughter of William and Belle Magley Williamson. She married Peter Hellenthal June 15, 1922, in this city. Her husband and one daughter and two sons survive. They are Mrs. M. E. Hastings, Blenn Hellenthal, at home and William Hellenthal, of Portsmouth. Of her immediate family her mother and one sister, Miss Jane Williamson, survive.

The funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the Springbank church, Rev. Mr. Clifford, of Andersonville, will officiate. Interment in Springbank cemetery.

HELD ON TWO CHARGES.

Allen Trego and Frank Clay were placed under arrest Sunday by the sheriff's department. The former on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated and the latter with being intoxicated. The Caveman and the Highbrow
By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

SAID Mr. Rascover to Mrs. Rascover: "The trouble with Martha is that she scares off eligible young men—she's too blamed highbrow for 'em."

Mrs. Rascover gave a deep sigh. "That's it, I suppose," she agreed. "She's twenty-five now—a year older than I was when we were married. I've talked to her and talked to her, but it's no use. She's a walking encyclopedia of all the 'ologies' and talks of Literature and Art with capital letters."

"I suppose that just suits the Manchester fellow," said Mr. Rascover. "I can't bear him. He gets my goat. I wish she would marry Bart Jencks. He's all right, personally, and his father has money. But fellows like Bart will stand about so much highbrow stuff and then they shy off, no matter how pretty a girl is."

Now all this regarding the relations between Bart and Martha was strictly true. But one thing—Bart wasn't afraid of her, and most young men were. Martha had tolerated the young man at first because she found him amusing; then she went on tolerating him with the idea of improving and building up his mental equipment.

That last is a dangerous phase. When a woman undertakes reformatory or uplift work with regard to a young man you can almost always hear the wedding bells tinkling in the distance. In spite of all her highbrow frills, Martha was a pretty bright girl.

Martha had not seen Bart for a week—he had got into the habit of calling at least twice a week and this hiatus puzzled her. She did hope he would call that night. Not because she was so anxious to see him, of course, but because she had an unpleasant duty to perform and wanted to get it over with. She was not going to do anything crude, you understand; not going to tell him that he must cease calling, or anything like that; but just deftly impress upon him that, as the romanticists used to say, "she could never be his," though as a matter of fact, he had never asked her.

Egbert Manchester had called on her the night before. Egbert was on the same psychic plane as she. He wore glasses, taught in a girl's college and was up on everything worth while. It was a liberal education in the higher branches to hear him talk. When he had first begun calling Martha was sure she had at last met her soul-mate. But, to tell the truth, Egbert had become rather a bore. Besides, he had an unpleasant way of correcting Martha—as if he were correcting examination papers. And it must be acknowledged that, while Martha's knowledge was all-embracing, it rather lacked accuracy. Subconsciously she was glad that it was Bart Jencks that she was expecting and not the erudite Egbert.

It did not take Martha long to get under way when Bart arrived. She was going to show him by a logical discourse how impossible it was for two persons so different in mentality, temperament and psychic plane to take upon themselves the relations of man and wife. But hardly had she got well started when Bart interrupted her with: "Martha, are you a good cook?" Under the unexpectedness of the attack she faltered and replied: "Why, yes, mother thinks I am. She insisted on my learning domestic science. Why?"

"Well," drawled Bart, "being able to cook, of course, isn't everything; but a woman who knows how to cook herself can supervise the kitchen department better than one who can't. You have every other qualification for a good wife. I'm glad you have a knowledge of cooking, too. It will come in handy after we are married."

"Married?" gasped Martha. "Who are we?"
"This is madness," cried Martha. "I have no idea of marrying you."

"Better get the idea, then," returned Bart calmly, "for I'm going to marry you—and you have known it for a long time. Guess we can tip our psychic planes so that they will meet if we try. Then you know you would have years and years of married life to devote to my mental uplift." That last shot hit the bull's-eye. There flashed through Martha's brain two pictures. In one she was married to Bart and leading him gently to higher things. In the other she was married to Egbert Manchester, who was oppressing her with his intellectual superiority and correcting her at every slip she made.

"You are going to marry me," went on Bart confidently—"and if I catch that simp, Egbert Manchester, hanging around here much more I'll punch his nose."

"I was never so astonished in my life!" protested Martha.
"Glad of it," replied Bart, "come, give us a kiss." Martha struggled as he took her in his arms—but what could a poor weak woman do in the hands of a caveman?

Greatest Works Recorded
Many of those who know Beethoven have heard his work
principally through the medium of recorded music. There
is that most famous and most popular of his nine symphonies, the No. 5, in C Minor, which Sir Landon Ronald and the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra have recorded in its entirety. The Flonzaley Quartet have contributed the matchless Quartet No. 16, in
F Major, and the equally celebrated Quartet No. 2, in G
Major. And there are the Eg-
mont Overture, the romantic
Moonlight Sonata, the Sonata
No. 9 which is better known,
perhaps, as the Kreutzer Sonata, and other symphonies
and instrumental compositions which have been recorded by some of the world's most famous musicians and
musical organizations.

cording process have been with
compositions of the immortal Bee-

TAXICABS

Favorite Prey of Big City Hold-
up Men.

Taxi drivers are a particularly rich prey for holdup men because very few robberies of this sort are ever reported, writes a New York taxi driver in an anonymous article in this week's Liberty. Speaking of being held up by two well dressed young men whom he had picked as fares, he says:

"Did I stop at the nearest police station and report those bad little boys to the coppers? I did not. That would have meant a further loss. If the police were lucky enough to capture them, I'd have to go to court to testify at all the hearings and trials. By the time they were convicted I'd have lost more time and money than I'd been robbed of. And ten chances to one some slick lawyer would have wiggled them out of it. And maybe, while they were free on bail, they'd have laid for me with automatics and made me look like a honeycomb radiator.

"It's just one of those things you have to put up with if you drive a hack around New York after midnight," the writer explains. "I'll bet that not 10 per cent of such stickups are reported to the authorities. If you run a grocery store, you must expect that a certain number of your customers will run out on their bills; if you drive a taxi, you must expect a certain number of holdups."

EDUCATIONAL NOTES

Children of Porto Rico are taught to speak, read and write in both the Spanish and English languages. More efficiency in English than in Spanish, in both speed and thought getting, was shown in a recent test of reading abilities of pupils in Vieques. The supervisor states that more intensive work is done in English than in Spanish, and that consequently the children are more careful in their use of English.

X-ray photographs of Harvard freshmen, taken this year for the first time, showed that only 36 of the 842 men had any physical defects at all, and these were of a minor nature. As to posture, silhouettegraphs showed that only 35 men carried themselves well enough to be rated in the "A" groups, 300 were graded "B," 375 "C," and 124 "D." These findings are slightly better than the statistics of the class of 1926.

Training for teachers of nature study work is offered by the Brooklyn Botanic Garden. Courses of one, two, or more years are given, open only to graduates of city training schools, normal schools, or colleges, and to teachers presenting satisfactory credentials of service. Work is correlated to meet the needs of each grade of the elementary school, and emphasis is placed upon outdoor garden practice. The courses have been accepted by the board of education of the city of New York for teachers' credits.

Lost Money Restored

Twenty-six years ago a purse containing $63 was lost by Alfred Canto, of Malone, N. Y. Recently an envelope from Pittsfield, Mass., was delivered to Canto containing that amount and a note, which read: "This is the money you lost 26 years ago." A card was inclosed with the request that it be returned to the sender so that he might know that Canto received the cash.

How Much?

As a problem in simple arithmetic we have always wanted to know how much is:

A nominal sum?

A ridiculously low figure?

A silver offering?

An enormous profit.—Peoria Journal.

Yes, and may we not add, how much is:

A living wage?

Rewarding Carefulness
